Summary: Solomon Northup was born free as the son of an emancipated slave, who lived and worked in New York. In 1841, two con men offered him lucrative work playing fiddle in a circus, so he travelled with them to Washington, D.C., where he was drugged, kidnapped, and sold as a slave into the Red River region of Louisiana. For the next twelve years he survived as the human property of several different slave masters, where most of his suffering was at the hands of plantation owner Edwin Epps.

Philosophy

Summary: In everyday life, we generally assume that we can make our own decisions on matters which concern our own lives. We assume that a life followed only according to decisions taken by other people, against our will, cannot be a well-lived life – we assume, in other words, that we are and should be autonomous. However, it is equally true that many aspects of our lives are not chosen freely: this is true of social relations and commitments but also of all those situations we simply seem to s...

Summary: New technologies are changing how we protect our citizens and wage our wars. Among militaries, everything taken for granted about the ability to maneuver and fight is now undermined by vulnerability to "weapons of mass disruption": cutting-edge computer worms, viruses, and invasive robot networks. At home, billions of household appliances and other "smart" items that form the Internet of Things risk being overtaken, then added to the ranks of massive, malicious "zombie" armies. The age ...

Summary: Confessions of a Recovering Engineer will be a logical 'Part 2' to Chuck's book Strong Towns. It builds on Strong Towns: Bottom-Up Revolution by focusing on the core transportation insights Marohn has developed in more than a decade of writing for Strong Towns. The article Confessions of a Recovering Engineer (November 2011) remains the most widely read and distributed piece ever published on the Strong Towns website.

In the past few years, we have seen an increase in public interest as...

Business & Economics / Management

Summary: The traditional view of business strategy is that business growth requires finding wide-open market spaces, developing diverse breakthrough innovations, and achieving many "must-wins." The problem with the "more-is-better" view of strategy is that it generates complexity and scatters focus. We struggle to stretch our teams and our resources to address a long list of priorities and ultimately end up with little differentiation for our brands. Our tools are to blame for our lack of focus:...
